Regularly reflects on the effectiveness of lessons, units, and interactions with students, both individually and with colleagues, and uses insights gained to improve practice and student learning.

Evidence

After the post-conference about an earlier observation, Ms. B sought clarification of the options I proposed. Ms. B developed a follow-up activity that focused on deepening students' understanding of the concept of "round characters."

Feedback

You reflected on the effectiveness of the lesson and realized that students had not met your objective, and you created a follow-up activity that could help ensure they learned what you intended. By doing this, you demonstrated your capacity to reflect and take action to improve student learning and your practice.
