BPS--Lynch Aspiring Principal Fellowship Program

A partnership between the Boston Public Schools and the Lynch Leadership Academy at Boston College

The Office of Educator Effectiveness is excited to announce a program to prepare educators for positions as principals and headmasters in the Boston Public Schools (BPS), presented as a joint effort between BPS and Boston College’s Lynch Leadership Academy. This innovative, year-long fellowship, the BPS-Lynch Principal Fellowship Program (BLPF), is an intensive, district-based principal training and certification program.

BLPF provides Fellows with a salary for one year, residency in a high-quality school, mentoring by a highly-effective principal, and professional development led by national experts in both the education and business sectors. The Fellowship focuses on building the instructional leadership skills of participants, and successful completion of the program will lead to a position as a school leader in the Boston Public Schools.

Successful BLPF candidates:
- Are current educators who demonstrate the skills to successfully close achievement gaps in public schools;
- Have a proven track record of improving student achievement;
- Believe that all students will achieve college success;
- Focus on student achievement results and are data-driven and focused;
- Possess strong project-management skills; and
- Possess effective interpersonal skills and are self-aware.

Fellows benefit from:
- A one-year salary package;
- School-based residency with a highly-effective, experienced principal/headmaster mentor;
- Access to a cohort of mission-aligned school leaders;
- Licensure as a school administrator;
- Access to high-performing schools and the resources they leverage to get results; and
- Professional development led by national experts in both the education and business sectors.
